Death Sentence stands on the edge of life and peers down at the dark chasm; whether that edge belongs to the life of the narrator, the lives of the women, or neither, the chasm yawns equally dark regardless. I was drawn to look on, without really knowing what I expected to see. I saw something, though. ...more.

Maurice Blanchot Quotes (Author of Death Sentence)

Blanchot engages with Heidegger on the question of the philosopher's death, showing how literature and death are both experienced as anonymous passivity, an experience that Blanchot variously refers to as "the Neutral". Unlike Heidegger, Blanchot rejects the possibility of an authentic relation to death, because he rejects the possibility of death, that is to say of the individual's experience of death, and thus rejects, in total, the possibility of understanding and "properly" engaging with it.
